The AccessArt Chorus

We all know that cuts to the arts and pressures on education mean that the visual arts can get overlooked by decision-makers. AccessArt believes that it is vital that we speak up about the importance of art and that every voice counts.

To help give vibrant visibility to our open letter to the government, we have devised the AccessArt Chorus.

Thought Piece: Narrative & Messaging

“We can’t let someone else’s lack of understanding or support control OUR narrative...”

In this presentation, Paula Briggs, CEO & Creative Director of AccessArt, explores the importance of keeping core values in mind when working towards high-quality visual arts education for all, if we are to avoid the contraction of the subject area further. Paula also shares AccessArt’s response to the Interim Curriculum & Assessment Review and shares some key information about current funding for the arts in schools. Find more Thought Pieces from AccessArt here...

AccessArt Treehouse

The government's statistics show 20% of pupils are “persistent absentees”, and many more parents and learners find a more appropriate education outside the formal education system.

AccessArt Treehouse ensures that ALL pupils can access a high-quality art education, at a time when they need it the most. Find out more...

Year Six - Exploring Identity

Schools are transient. We have a high turnover and strive to give children the opportunities to share their experiences from their arrival at QBS and for moving on to the next school. Therefore this unit of work was especially important.

The collage features a worksheet titled 'EXPLORING IDENTITY' with sections for 'Artful', 'Program Overview', 'Cross-Curricular Links', and 'Learning Objectives'. It also displays several student artworks, including a portrait of a person with a colorful background, a portrait of a person with a black background, and a portrait of a person with a yellow background.
