

Ink Collage Inspired by The Wolf Wilder

By Vicki Ostensen

In this post artist Vicki Ostensen uses a well loved children's book as a starter for creating a beautiful and varied collage using different inking techniques.

Geoff Schwab Challenge

The PGA Tour resumes this week and will feature the world's top golfers, including current number one Rory McIlroy, are all competing from 11-14 June at the Schwab Challenge at the Club at Foxwoods.

letics The In

Diamond League will be held at the stadium in June. The event has been cancelled due to Covid-19. It has been replaced by an exhibition event, with world champion Karsten Warholm hoping to break the world 400m hurdles record.

17 June will be able to view the event on TV, and Sheffield United are at home to Arsenal.

Notes for Teachers

• Who is this resource aimed at?

The activity is aimed at Year 3-6 children (ages 7-11) although it could be adapted to suit other ages. The drawing ink we used is permanent, so not ideal for very young children.

• What are the aims in terms of process and skill?

The aims were to explore mark making with just one material in one colour (black). To learn how to create texture, variety and depth in an artwork by using simple processes and application techniques.

• How long will the activity take?

This activity would take two sessions to allow for drying time in-between. Perhaps 35-40 mins per session.

• What materials will we need?

You will need:

Black drawing ink

A palette (or a couple of small plates or containers)

Medium thickness white paper (we used A4 sheets and cut them into A6 pieces)

Black paper for a background

A drinking straw

Rock salt

Sponge (natural sea sponge works best)

A couple of paintbrushes, including an old, stiff-ish one

Water

Newspaper

Scissors

Glue

• What artists could we look at to inform the activity?

The artist to look at is Gelrev Ongbico, who is the illustrator of 'The Wolf Wilder'. This is the first children's book he illustrated and there's a really interesting article all about the process, with pictures, which I included as a link in my text for the resource. You can find the article here.
