

Talking Points: Lewis Rossignol

Can we make art without thinking?

Lewis Rossignol makes art “like jazz.” He draws fast and loose, making scrappy marks on the page using a variety of mediums all at once. At times his work appears to be a chaotic stream of consciousness, but through the splatters of ink and scribbles, figures, situations, and words begin to emerge, and a narrative takes shape.

Watch the videos below and use the following questions to discuss Lewis Rossignol’s methods and work.

Lewis Rossignol is a fine artist who specialises in surrealist and experimental contemporary drawing and painting.

“I draw inspiration from all areas of life, including but not limited to, interesting people, architecture, music, and nature. Like many others from my generation (X), I also draw inspiration from pop culture, movies, and television, especially from the 80s and 90s, which should be apparent from my work.” – Lewis Rossignol

Rossignol has Tourette syndrome and finds that his tics disappear as he's drawing, providing him with short bursts of relief everyday. Find out how sketching helps Rossignol to manoeuvre around Tourette syndrome here.
